Spiritual Disciplines Guide

Week of December 11, 2022

We pick up our reading in the book of Psalms this week with an almost unanimous set of classic praise psalms. The nineties and early one hundreds, one after another, are psalms which declare the greatness and goodness of God. Several of them are sung today as lyrics for modern hymns or choruses. As you go through each day's reading, pause to meditate on what the psalm is declaring about the character of God. You could rephrase the psalm sentence by sentence in your own words. Mark or underline phrases that are especially meaningful or pertinent to your life circumstances at this time. Learn to use the psalms as a devotional guide for praise and thanksgiving to God in your own life. After all, that's one of the main objectives of Bible study -- to discover God in his word and then to think God's thoughts as you read and meditate on what he tells us. Enjoy the exercise. It's a true thrill to encounter God each day in the study of scripture -- to meditate is simply to pause as you read and to reflect on what you are seeing in scripture. Praying it back to him then makes it interactive, personal and devotional for you. May God bless your study of the book of Psalms!
