Old Testament

Daniel, along with Revelation in the New Testament, is a type of prophetic literature called Apocalyptic, which means unveiled. In Daniel and Revelation God, on a large scale basis, unveils what will be the last judgements of the earth because of mankind's wickedness and rebellion against God. Apocalyptic writing typically employs various kinds of symbols and figures of speech in order to speak to God's faithful people who will be alive at the time of final judgement.

Daniel is a contemporary of Jeremiah and Ezekiel. He is taken to Babylon in the first of three exiles somewhere around 605 B.C. The first half of his book portrays Daniel and his three Jewish friends whose faith in God is majorly tested by the Babylonian kings and culture. The last 6 chapters deal with future visions given to Daniel explaining what is to come in both the near and distant future. Note the details of Daniel's predictions and the accuracy with which chapters 7-9 have been accomplished. Chapters 10-12 have yet to occur. If you struggle with understanding Daniel, consider borrowing one of several reference works in our church library, including a full scale video/workbook series on Daniel from David Jeremiah.
