Old Testament
Week of April 18, 2021

The first half of Joshua deals with the military conquest of Canaan. From chapter 13 forward, Joshua distributes the land to the various tribes. Chapter 21:43-45 is the culminating verse of the book where God fulfills his promise to that generation by giving them full ownership of the land and peace from their enemies. Joshua reiterates this truth in his farewell address to Israel in chapter 23:14. His concluding challenge to Israel is to clarify their commitment to God -- will they serve him or foreign gods? Their public affirmation is to serve the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. And so they do to the end of that generation.

Judges recaps the closing chapter of Joshua's life and then opens a new chapter in Israel's history, one of the stormiest yet! Judges covers a period of about 400 years between Joshua and Samuel and the period of the kings of Israel. The context of Judges is corporate disobedience to God and tribal warfare. Israel's moral weakness leads to political vulnerability. Neighboring tribes move in to raid and attack their villages. The Judges are local military leaders that God raises up to liberate the people. Chapter 2:10-19 is a good summary of the cycle we will see in Judges.
