Spiritual Disciplines Guide

Week of October 29, 2023

Right after the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew records numerous miracles that Jesus performs. Several of these are only recorded in Matthew while most are also recorded in Mark and Luke. Every miracle he performs is a sign of sorts. Each signifies something about Jesus' identity and the power of God he possesses. You'll note as we refer to Luke's accounts in several instances that there are some variables in his miracles reflecting the points of view of Matthew and Luke. Rather than detracting from the authenticity of their accounts, the emphasis on different details actually affirms the independent recounting by each of the authors. They have not consulted with each other beforehand, but are simply reporting what happened in each miracle from their viewpoint. Notice too the instructions Jesus gives to his disciples. He is training them for their own apostolic ministry which will include healing the sick and driving out demons. Matthew 10 and Luke 10 are accounts of their first missionary trip without Jesus present.
